Ensenda Partners with CXT Software

Integration Supports the Growth of the Local Delivery Industry.

San Francisco, CA – April 11 , 2005 – Ensenda, the leading “last mile” logistics company servicing all of North America, today announced its partnership with CXT Software. Ensenda provides major retailers and industrial suppliers efficient, cost effective local and regional logistics services through its nationwide network of delivery providers, linked by the company’s Web-based technology and centralized customer support infrastructure. CXT Software provides information systems for the same-day, time-critical delivery industry.

The integration between Ensenda’s Web-based technology and CXT Software’s X Dispatch system is complete and already providing benefits to local delivery firms. With the integration, customer delivery information is transmitted seamlessly between the two systems, allowing firms to monitor and manage all delivery data through a single, integrated system.

“Ensenda is committed to forging partnerships that help the members of our Local Delivery Network easily manage the new business they get through Ensenda. CXT Software understands the needs of local delivery companies and we are thrilled to add them to our roster of partners,” says Rob Howard, vice president of operations for Ensenda.

Dan Calderone, chief technology officer of CXT Software, agrees, “Ensenda has drawn new business to the local delivery market that was previously handled by common carriers, private fleets, and LTL providers. We’re pleased to launch our partnership and provide this benefit to our user community.”

Ensenda provides fast, efficient and reliable last mile logistics services for leading national businesses like IKEA and Best Buy. The company has become the leading provider of nationwide local delivery services by forging a network of top delivery companies that spans the U.S. and Canada , and through establishing partnerships with leading local delivery software management systems.
